

CHANGING THE COURSE

When the adviser to the deputy chairman of the Planning Commission writes a detailed book marking contemporary India's biggest challenge — firming up our notoriously shaky-to-non-existent infrastructure — it makes great sense to listen. Gajendra Haldea doesn't leave simply provide a litany of woes — whether it be bottlenecks in the power sector (he authored the 2003 Electricity Bill) or institutional roadblocks in governance. He also makes nuts-and-bolts suggestions. He makes a very strong case for opening up all infrastructure sectors to competitive private investment. After reading this book, you'll wonder why no one has implemented what Haldea suggests all this while.
